Treatment of patients with progressive supranuclear palsy (PSP) is based on a variety of measures, including targeted treatment with acetylcholinesterase inhibitors and levodopa. However, treatment efficacy is presently not well determined, particularly at early stages. The authors conducted this study to determine whether [123I]IBZM single photon emission computed tomography (SPECT) can be used to evaluate therapeutic response in PSP. An SPECT study was performed in 10 PSP patients with mild motor impairment before and after 1 year of treatment with rasagiline. Changes in binding potential (BP) were compared with clinical scales and measures of function, including the Movement Disorders Society-sponsored revision of the Unified Parkinson's Disease Rating Scale (MDS-UPDRS). A linear regression of BP changes (12 scans for each patient) and treatment duration allowed the prediction of the change in MDS-UPDRS at 12 months with a median error of 4.6 points ($p = 0.026$). However, as with a similar prior study, the improvement on motor scales was not statistically significant ($p = 0.101$), possibly due to the small sample size. Comparison of SPECT and clinical scales revealed good correlation for the levodopa-induced dyskinesias (p Q: How to get files back from Google Cloud Storage that were dropped in blob store I have dropped a few files in Google Cloud Storage using the simple 570a42141b
