This is a follow-up question to this one. What I'm trying to do is to create a regular expression for both lists and sets that would accept any string value. For example, if I have a list like this one: ["1. A", "2. B", "3. C"] The user enters a string like this one: "B" My regex would output: ["1. A", "2. B"] Instead of this: ["1. A", "2. C"] Does anyone know how to do this? A: I don't think that regex is the way to go. You can use this: `explode($1,',')`; where $1 is the string you're trying to filter.

1. Field of the Invention The invention relates to a method and a device for the production of foil packages from semi-finished products manufactured from folded and/or glued sheets, the packages being arranged in a delivery buffer located in a delivery station, and the packages being fed in a feed station to an inspection station that inspects the respective packages.

Description of the Prior Art In the prior art, the packages are transferred to an inspection station that detects inclusions in the packages, such as foreign bodies and forgeries, along with the production of a log in the system that comprises the feed station, the delivery buffer and the inspection station. To that end, after they have been tested in the inspection station, the packages are sent to an output station where they are placed in crates in a manual manner, or a loading station where the packages, in a semi-automatic manner, are transferred from the inspection station to respective crates in a system comprising conveying means. The crates are stacked in a subsequent crate handling station, for example in an automatic manner, where they are transferred in one or more levels of a discharge station to a packaging station where packaging is performed. In the packaging station, packages are stacked into one or more levels in an accumulation station, and are finally placed into a box with a lid in a

It was shown that despite high blood pressure plasma renin activity in normal subjects increases only in elderly subjects. After the administration of 50 mg of captopril in this type of subjects mean plasma renin activity is higher than in young subjects. In all the group of elderly subjects mean reaction time before and after captopril is not significantly different. Results suggest that normotensives hypertensives aged over 65 years respond to captopril in the same way as hypertensives of young and middle age.
