It's been taught to me that the probability of tossing a fair coin twice and getting the same result both times is 1/2. This means that the probability of getting the result 'heads' (the number of times you flipped the coin, and all of them came up 'heads') after one flip is 1/2, and the probability of getting a 'tails' result after one flip is also 1/2. So, if I flip a coin a million times, has that ever happened? I tried counting each one of them and writing it down, and I reached a total of 45,997,857,401,355,217,139,597,953,527,923,783,247,113,818,733,531,141,882,807,429,873,481,749,877,377,129,068,913,148,935,797,895,064,745,344,438,853,871,891,071,120,197,995,324,703,382,053,939,829,117,856,933,749,554,479,917,775,326,977,967,977,087,843,345,745,655,086,585,903,276,407,465,300,568,419,968,953,580,170,565,626,218,153,825,677,906,390,744,326,581,902,288,494,959,9
